NATURAL CALAMITY

It is very important for us to take a look at the world around us and think about it in terms of the will of God. As we do so, certain questions are going to come to mind regarding the nature of the creation in which we live, such as “why does God allow natural calamities to take place?” In discussing this question we want to make sure that we do not in any way trivialize natural calamities. The pain, sorrow, and suffering caused by natural calamities can at times be too intense to describe in human language. This is a very serious matter and we will approach it as such.

A strong wind destroyed the house in which Job’s children had gathered. Job did not understand why that happened. He thought God had caused this to happen. In the initial stages of Job’s suffering, he resigned himself to the reality of the loss and worshipped God. Job also suffered financial collapse, and painful physical illness in addition to his grief. All of this led him to a terrible state in which his misery caused him to long for death even while demanding God give him an answer for his suffering. When God spoke to Him, God asked a series of questions designed to make two main points to Job. Those are, God is all-knowing and God is all-powerful. God understands everything with perfect wisdom and knowledge. Also, He can do anything He chooses to do and will always act in perfect holiness and justice. God’s response to Job shows us we must be very careful to show proper reverence and respect for God’s holy, perfect, and sovereign will as we discuss questions such as this. God’s response to Job also shows us such questions are complex, and the answers may not be obviously evident, or fully revealed to us. However, there may be some clues God has given us to help us understand some of the answer.

Natural calamities occur because of the nature of this earth and the manner in which it functions. There are physical laws of nature created by God to govern this universe which allow the universe to function in the exact way that suits His perfectly holy and just purposes.

That includes provision for soul-building, through the humbling and often devastating effects of natural calamities. Such can turn the thoughts of some people toward God even as it sometimes sharpens spiritual focus.

What we do know is that this world is that this world is different from the beautiful garden in which God first placed man. Man lost that garden because of his decision to rebel against God. Rebelling against the perfectly pure and holy nature of God and his inherently authoritative will has dramatic and severe consequences. For their sin, the first couple were removed from the garden and the earth changed. No longer would the fruits and vegetables come naturally through the soil and easily as they did in the garden. Life became much more difficult after sin was introduced into this world. Sin is the choice made and the action taken that is a transgression of the law of God. It is man exercising his free-will in a negative and destructive way.

The conditions of the world changed even more dramatically when the flood came upon the earth. Peter's language in 2 Peter 3 indicates a clear distinction between the way the world was before the flood as compared to the way it was after the flood. Both the descriptions of the flood in Genesis 6-9 and the geological evidence and implications indicate a tremendous change in the nature of the earth as a result of the flood. It is very likely the natural calamities that occur today are the effects of changes in the earth caused by the flood. So why did God send the flood? Because the population of the earth, excepting only Noah and his family, had completely turned away from God. They had exercised their God given free-will for evil. Their thoughts were continually wicked and the earth became filled with violence. God gave them one hundred and twenty years to change but they refused. They had reached a point of no return so God started again. But, in the process He changed the world. Perhaps, some of those changes in the world that now lead to natural calamities were designed by God to prevent the population of the earth from becoming as profoundly arrogant, thoroughly wicked, and intensely violent as it was in the days before the flood.

God has created man in His image. Though we may not fully understand all that is involved in that statement, the fact that man is a spirit being of free-moral agency may be a part of being created in the image of God. Man being created with the ability to choose how to live his life gives man the ability to do what is right, and the ability to engage in evil. Daniel Lee, the son of Kevin and Darla Lee, who were members here years ago before moving, is still in the hospital. He has Covid pneumonia and has blood coming from his lung. It's very serious and he may even have to have a lung transplant. Daniel as a wife and young daughter. Prayers are requested.

With the choice to do what is right there are positive consequences, and yet with the choice to do what is evil there are negative consequences. The dramatic changes in the earth caused by the flood led to the natural calamities the world is subjected to, and the flood is
